He's back! Here we Perot again

Wanting to be America's 'servant,' Perot enters race

Associated Press Reports

DALLAS — Ross Perot plunged belatedly into the presidential race on Thursday, setting the stage for a three-way struggle with President Bush and Bill Clinton over the final month of the campaign.

"The volunteers have asked me to run for president of the United States," he said. "Jim Stockdale and I are honored to accept their request."

Stockdale, a retired Navy admiral, is Perot's running mate.

Perot apologized for abruptly quitting the race in July, when he said he had concluded he could not win.

"I thought I was doing the right thing. I made a mistake. I take full responsibility for it," Perot said. "If you elect me, I go as your servant."

When he quit 11 weeks ago, Perot said he believed both parties would take up his call to offer credible plans to reduce the federal budget deficit. But Thursday he said they had failed to do so.

"Neither political party has effectively addressed the issues," Perot said. "The American people are concerned about this government they pay for that doesn't produce results."

On Thursday, Perot didn't address the likelihood of victory in his announcement speech. Instead, he looked beyond the election, pledging to dedicate himself to solving the nation's problems.

"Looking forward, working together, we can fix anything," he said.

Perot once had support rivaling that of Bush and Clinton in the public opinion polls. His backing dwindled through a series of controversies in the spring and he now runs a distant third in polls.

His entry has the effect of injecting uncertainty to a race that Clinton has led consistently since July.

Perot cast his announcement as a deferential bow to the volunteers he said had urged him to reconsider his earlier refusal to run. However, spending reports filed with the government indicate he has spent millions since his nominal withdrawal to maintain a political infrastructure and make sure his name was placed on all 50 state ballots.

Perot is worth an estimated $3.5 billion.

Bush declined to answer questions about Perot as he arrived at the White House from Camp David in advance of the Texas comments. Clinton, campaigning in Wisconsin, said, "I'm going to run my race," Clinton said. "I think my fight is with George Bush."

Clinton said he got into the race "because I believed we couldn't afford four more years of George Bush and trickle-down economics. I still believe I have the best economic plan."

Perot said his fight was with both parties, and a political system that has allowed the economy to deteriorate.

"We've got to put our people back to work," he said. To rejuvenate the economy, Perot has prepared a detailed plan to cut the deficit, including a mixture of higher taxes and spending cuts.

Analysts in both parties say Perot could hurt Bush in Texas and Florida, while his return would be expected to hurt Clinton in California and the Midwest.

Local thoughts on candidate Perot: A wishy-washy, egotistical weasel

Texas presidential flirt Ross Perot's late-breaking candidacy is too little, too late, several Cal Poly students and other local residents said Thursday.

In fact, most were quick to bash Perot's maverick, shotgun entry into a now three-way presidential contest as a retreat from cowardice and little else. ASI President Kristin Burnett even dismissed him as a "weasel."

"It's too late," said San Luis Obispo resident Evelyn Duran. "All he'll do now is mess up Clinton. I might have changed my vote in the beginning, but not now." That comment ran in concert with many San Luis Obispo residents who said they remain disenchanted with Perot's on-again, off-again candidacy. Just because he was back in, they said, didn't mean they were turned on.

"I was a Perot supporter," said Scott Mauro, a civil and environmental engineering graduate student. "Now, I'm not going to vote for (him). A president should not be wishy-washy. He is too egotistical. We need leadership, not games."

"Wishy-washy" came to the mind of San Luis Obispo resident Denise Boner as well.

"If he wouldn't have been so wishy-washy, I would have stuck with him," Boner said. "I'm sticking with Clinton."

Poly students rush to register

Turnout at campus locations labeled as 'extraordinary'

By Kristie McCall
Staff Writer

As the Oct. 5 voter registration deadline nears, a diverse representation of Poly students are taking advantage of campus sign-up locations.

In fact, campus registration officials reported Thursday they have signed up more than 1,400 new and reregistered voters since fall quarter began.

"We have registered over 1,000 (students) so far," poly-SCOPE Chairman Rex Smith said. "This is an extraordinary turnout."

PolySCOPE is a nonpartisan club whose goal is to promote awareness of political issues and get students to vote.

"Students want to get involved and they want to be part of this community," Smith said. He said Cal Poly students are already concerned with political issues, and "if they are given a little nudge, they will be willing to participate."

A joint effort of the College Republicans and Congressional candidate Michael Huffington has registered approximately 220 Poly Republicans, according to organizer Steve Miller.

Miller said the current figure is low, but expects it to increase.

"We are trying to register as many Republicans as possible," he said.

Meanwhile, campus

Democrats say they have registered "at least 200 people at Cal Poly," according to organizer Charlie Allen.

Peter Neely, a graphic communications senior, registered this week as a Republican. He said he wants to vote because he does not have faith in the Democrat's policies.

"I plan to vote for Bush," Neely said. "I like his moral stance."

Biochemistry senior Michael Chasey registered with poly-SCOPE to change his address. This will be his first time voting in a presidential election.

No money, no class, Poly tuition increases

Students pay first, then CAPTURE

By Liz Weber
Staff Writer

Students must pay the new 40 percent Cal Poly student fee increase before they can register for winter quarter, university officials said Thursday.

The university will send out bills Oct. 13 to students' permanent addresses, according to Nancy Reynolds of Cal Poly's Student Accounts Office.

Students with more than six units will pay $124 - $129 including the health card fee increase - while those with less than six units will be back-charged $72, Reynolds said.

This new increase does not include the athletic referendum. It is a state university fee which could not be included earlier due to the late state budget.

Students will benefit from this increase through additional classes, new equipment for teachers and more money for financial aid, according to university officials.

Money from the increase will go to the Chancellor's Office, which has established two funds.

The University Priorities Fund will help the schools pay for overhead costs.

The Academic Program Recovery Fund will be distributed to the schools, depending on enrollment.

Cal Poly Budget Director Rick Ramirez said although the percentage increase is sizable, the state university system is still low compared to other schools.

"The state just doesn't have the money."

Rick Ramirez,
Cal Poly
Budget Director

"The state just doesn't have the money," Ramirez said.

Ramirez said 65 to 85 percent of the state budget is mandated to go other places.

The university system is not protected and therefore receives cuts, he added.

Sarajevo residents' in fear of Serb 'cleansing' sweep

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — They made Fadil Dedic kneel, strip to the waist, and shoved a pistol in his mouth.

Muslim and Croat residents of a Serb-controlled section of Sarajevo told harrowing tales Thursday of four months of occupation by Serb militias and a sudden sweep to "cleanse" the area of non-Serbs.

Relatively safe, seated in a central Sarajevo school with their few belongings, each also had stories to tell of Serb neighbors who helped them — and in some cases may have saved their lives.

The sudden move to clear Grbavica, a neighborhood across the Miljacka River from the center of Sarajevo, could be connected to nascent moves to find a negotiated settlement to the siege of Sarajevo and six months of warfare throughout Bosnia.

By evicting all non-Serbs from the area, Serb Bosnian forces could more easily lay claim to keeping it as a bargaining chip or a toehold in Sarajevo, a multi-ethnic city of 400,000 residents.

Government officials said the recent spate of "ethnic cleansing" created 550 refugees.

The refugees said they had 15 minutes to pack up and leave their apartments.

They were harassed, but agreed there was little violence.

However, they said able-bodied men of fighting age were not allowed to leave. No one knows what happened to them, but Bosnian government soldiers stationed across the Miljacka River said they heard screams until early Thursday morning.

The number of detained men was not known but appeared to be scores. One of the refugees, Enver Dzelilovic, said 56 people came out with his group but about 30 men were left behind.

Dzelilovic, a 46-year-old chemical engineer, said one Bosnian Serb soldier told him: "You have to leave today because the order is to have a clean Grbavica tomorrow."

He said four young men came to his door at 11:45 a.m. Wednesday, two dressed in uniforms of the Bosnian Serb army and two in the black of the paramilitary forces of Zeljko Raznjatovic.

Raznjatovic, known as Arkan, is chief of a nationalist Serb militia blamed for many "ethnic cleansing" sweeps through Bosnia. He is wanted by Interpol for crimes committed in western Europe.

Jozefina Gliha, a Croat, said she fought with a large, bearded man dressed in black who kicked her when she tried to protect her 24-year-old daughter from being abducted.

School reform bill passes in House, Bush plan rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's plan to provide public aid for private schools suffered defeat in the House, where majority Democrats approved a bill that more closely parallels a school-choice approach backed by their presidential nominee, Bill Clinton.

On a 254-166 vote Wednesday, House Democrats rejected a move by Rep. William Goodling, R-Pa., to force adoption of a provision aimed at helping parents send their children to private schools — a centerpiece of Bush's campaign-year legislative initiatives.

Education Secretary Lamar Alexander immediately denounced the action.

Rep. Dale E. Kildee, D-Mich., said that "if President Bush vetoes this effort, our children will be the ones who suffer for it. This bill would start the process of genuine reform, and that's a process we badly need if we are to continue as an educated, skilled and competitive nation in the future."

The bill, which was passed by voice vote and sent to the Senate, calls for federal funding for schools that want to implement various new programs to boost student academic performance.

Bush favors giving vouchers to parents who could then use the funds for tuition at the school of their choice, including private or parochial institutions. Clinton wants public school choice only and opposes extending the choice to private and parochial schools.

Democrats repeatedly rejected Republican efforts to expand parents' school choices to private and parochial institutions in earlier floor debates and during meetings of House and Senate negotiators.

"This bill represents a triumph of reason and a triumph of common sense," said Rep. Major Owens, D-N.Y. He said American students have difficulty reaching "world-class standards when they attend Third World schools."

Although $800 million is authorized in the education bill for such reform activities as reducing classroom size, rescheduling days and regrouping students by academic programs rather than age, lawmakers acknowledged there is no money available for this year.

The money for school improvement plans would flow through states to local school districts and would be tied to the creation of goals, plans for changes in the curriculum and establishment of special panels of educators, parents and students to develop the reform plans.

Although the bill lacks Bush's key education initiative, it does establish, as he wanted, standards for key subjects, model tests and assessments, and increasing flexibility in government education programs.

STATE

Wilson vetoes emergency service funds, 911 affected

SACRAMENTO (AP) — The 350,000 Californians expected to call the state's seven regional poison control centers can expect busy signals and long waits for life-saving advice because of budget cuts, center officials say.

"The chance of getting a busy signal ... is going to be very great," said Tom Kearney, president of the California Association of Poison Control Centers.

"And people who encounter busy signals when they call us are frantic — both the public and the health professional. They need the information, and there's no alternative."

Gov. Pete Wilson vetoed a bill Wednesday that would have provided state funds to keep the centers open.

State funding for the centers was cut $1.7 million. In addition, they are losing tens of thousands more in local funds because counties and public hospitals have their own budget cuts.

"The cutbacks are going to have a tremendous effect on emergency services because say a person now has to call 911. They're going to get an ambulance and a fire truck ... and it could all be for a non-life-threatening emergency," said Michelle Rains of the California Emergency Medical Services Authority, which runs the poison control network.

The UC Davis Medical Center's Regional Poison Control Center in Sacramento has enough funds to continue to operate this year, said John Lamb, health educator at the center.

Yosemite contract supplies utilities, closure of landfill

OGDEN, Utah (AP) — A Utah company has won a $4.4 million building contract at California's Yosemite National Park.

Wadman Corp. of Ogden will build an open yard storage area, bin refurbishing building, truck scale and control building, as well as needed utilities and closure of a landfill, in the park's El Portal area, said James Ridenour, director of the National Park Service.

He said in a news release Wednesday that the job is part of the first phase of the park's 1980 general management plan, which determined the need to move nonessential activities out of the Yosemite Valley. The $49 million, five-phase project is to be completed in 1998.

A $3.4 million contract went to A.T. Mechanical of Phoenix, Ariz., a minority contractor under the U.S. Small Business Administration, for electrical work.

Gatherers mourn professor

Friends, family and students hold memorial service for 'Miss Josy'

By Krystn Shrieve
Staff Writer

Children's singing filled the Cal Poly preschool lab on Wednesday evening, but instead of the usual carefree voices, there was a quiet note of sadness in their song.

Dr. Josephine Stearns, better known as "Miss Josy," died on Aug. 25, after a seven-year battle with breast cancer.

Stearns came to Cal Poly in 1969 and was involved with the psychology and human development preschool lab for more than 20 years. She also taught courses in the department and was awarded Cal Poly's Distinguished Teaching Award in 1975.

Friends, students, faculty members and parents gathered

Josephine Stearns

Wednesday evening for a memorial service in her honor. A commemorative tree, affectionately called the "Miss Josy Tree," will not only provide shade in the children's playground, but will also be a reminder of Stearns' many years of hard work and dedication at Cal Poly.

Gatherers at the service joined together to sing a special version of Stearns' favorite song:

"Twinkle, twinkle little star, now I know just what you are. Up above the clouds I see, my Miss Josy winking at me..."

While children played in the background, friends reminisced about happy times they shared with Stearns.

Winnie Reynolds, Stearns' housemate for more than 10 years, shared some of her fondest memories, often making the crowd laugh with funny recollections.

"She was a delightful person," Reynolds said. "She was so full of life and she absolutely loved to tease. After all these years, I still never knew when she was teasing or telling the honest-to-God truth."

Norma Fitton worked with Stearns for 12 years. She said Stearns' warmth and devotion to children was amazing.

"Miss Josy had complete devotion to the children and their welfare," she said. "There was nothing she wouldn't do for them. She was so kind and constantly giving of herself."

"The children were always sending her pictures and cards," Fitton added. "I don't even think she realized how much she was loved by all of them. Miss Josy really inspired the children. I guess she inspired us all."

Human development senior Ceanne Johnson said she learned a lot from the professor.

"I was in her class my freshman year," Johnson said, "and the first thing she said to us was, 'Children are children and don't ever call them kids.'"

"I learned more from her that quarter than I've ever learned from anybody else," she added. "Her love for children was truly noble. I feel lucky to have known her."

Fitton said Stearns had a special relationship with children and was a vital part of their growth.

"Josy realized the children's world was more complex and difficult than ever before," she said. "She wanted them to know they were special and worked hard to make sure they would be ready for all life has to offer."

Human development professor Margaret Berrio worked with Stearns for five years.

"She cared so deeply about the children," Berrio said. "Sometimes we would joke with her that she liked children more than adults."

"She had no children of her own, but the way we see it, she had hundreds of children over the years," she added. "They were her whole life. She created a special world for children and always let them know they were loved."

Berrio said Stearns cared passionately about the lab and the children and students who were part of it.

"This isn't the first time Cal Poly has experienced a budget crisis," Berrio said. "Whenever money gets tight, people question the necessity of the children's lab, but Josy always defended it."

"She always did whatever it took to make sure it would be there for the children," she added.

Fitton said Stearns was one of the strongest women she ever knew.

"It seemed like her motto in life was to take what life offered and make the best of it," Fitton said. "That may sound trite, but that's the way she lived her life."

Berrio agreed that Stearns showed amazing strength in her fight against cancer.

"When she found out she had cancer, she never complained and was always willing to talk about it and share her experiences to help others," she said.

"She made the decision to treat her cancer as aggressively as possible," Berrio added. "She was willing to do whatever she could to fight it because she truly loved life."

America is still in the running

The case that Jodi Ross made in her article "America is Losing the Race" (9-29-92) is, for the most part, accurate. The one thing I take exception to is her reference to American made automobiles. While I agree some American cars are still inferior to their overseas competition, most have greatly improved in the last five years. For example, American made Saturn automobiles recently ranked 3rd in a J.D. Powers owners survey — behind only Lexus and Infinity, and ahead of such notables as Acura, Honda, and Toyota!

By continuing to perpetuate the myth that American products are inferior to their foreign competition, as Ross did in her article, she is only making things worse for this country — not better.

Alumna rebuffs WOW critique

It is obvious that Tom Pinkston missed the point of the W.O.W. board's decision to present a skit about homophobia to the wowiees. All four skits, (the sexual assault, drugs, ethnic/cultural diversity and homophobia) were presented to educate the wowiees; in the cases of the ethnic/cultural diversity skit and the homophobia skit, these were presented in an effort to break down stereotypes about different groups of people.

Over the five years I attended Cal Poly I heard and read many negative comments about people's cultural background and or their sexual orientation. When the W.O.W. Board chose to do a skit about cultural diversity about homophobia. Incoming students, many of whom are on their own for the first time, are going to encounter a diversity of people at Cal Poly. If the students here are to get along with each other it is important that they respect the rights of their classmates to be different than themselves. One way of introducing the concept of tolerance of diversity was through the W.O.W. skits.

Editor tells why to ask why

By Bryan Bailey

It seems to me that the dawn of a new school year brings with it that sleepy, neurotic feeling that is so common among both students of higher-education and Alzheimer victims. Millions of students converging on campuses across the nation like ants on a Butterfinger bar, all brushing fatigue from their eyes in anticipation of all-nighters to come.

This is not an uncommon syndrome; senioritis, some people call it (even though it hits all levels indiscriminately). After the somewhat less-than-rousing summer I enjoyed, I can understand the lingering narcoma which seems to affect the student body for the first few days as they attempt to knock the rust off atrophied synapses.

But there does come a time to wake up and start asking questions.

Imagine, if you will, a remotely situated class somewhere near the nether regions of the campus, out next to the green pastures of the Agriculture unit, where only cows have gone before.

You might think at first that this is a normal class, and indeed it appears to be, until that one fateful instant, that crucial juncture, that shining moment of truth when that most important of all the education processes, student-teacher interaction, must take place.

I can see it even now, more dramatic than Agassi's win at Wimbledon:

That's only his third service fault of the match, Bud, and it happened at match point. He'll really have to reach down and come up with a winner this time.

Yes, Dick, but I think he can do it. Look, he's ready to serve the question. The class looks ready, they're moving easily on their collective mental toes, here it comes, right down the line ...

Silence.

A class full of America's best and brightest shifting softly in their chairs and not an answer to be found to a question more than half of them must know.

Silence.

The director of "Ferris Beuller's Day Off" had to have attended college within the past decade-and-a-half to have known about this phenomenon.

Silence.

Anyone? Anyone?

It's time to wake up, Cal Poly, and start asking questions.

A lot of changes have been made during the summer, and I'm not talking just about the fresh coat of paint applied to the various construction sites around campus.

Did you know that during the summer a special Academic Senate Committee came up with recommendations on how to deal with the ever-present budget crunch? Recommendations which included, among other things:

— the consolidation of the journalism and graphic-communications major into one amorphous mass of students known as "speech-communications majors?"

— the elimination of the school (oh, pardon me, COLLEGES — yes, that's another change, get used to it) of agriculture business — and the consolidation of aeronautical engineering into another major.

Let me try that last one again.

The consolidation of one of the few programs of aeronautical engineering left in the West into another major.

As of this date, I'm not sure even Mustang Daily knows whether or not those proposals are, or were, under consideration. The library was supposed to have a copy of the committee's report, but when I asked to see it, it had grown legs and walked.

(If you're interested in seeing this document there is a copy available for public viewing in FOB, room 25H.)

Will anyone bother to check on that?

Anyone? Anyone?

It's not really our fault as students that we don't ask questions. We're fighting years of conditioning, years of stigma that says "Don't stand out in a crowd! You're swimming against the stream! Don't talk in class! Don't ask questions!"

Don't ask questions?

For years this dogma is drilled into us as grade schoolers, the junior-high students, and even high school in a lot of cases.

Don't ask questions, don't raise controversy, don't talk in class.

And then we arrive at Cal Poly, clean and scrubbed and quiet, and professors want us to talk. Worse, to actually ask questions?

No, not entirely our fault.

If you want an illustration of this sublimely pitched campaign of involuntary ignorance, give a thought to one of the most popular beer slogans in the public eye right now. Does the phrase "Why ask why" raise any brows?

I can think of a couple good reasons to ask why. How about asking why a university is considering cutting heavily into a journalism program which has proven itself second only to Cal

Berkeley, a graduate level program, in producing the only daily college paper in the United States produced entirely by students?

How about asking why anyone would consider slowly "dissolving" an aeronautical engineering program at a school which is, by the accounts of many practicing engineers I've talked with, the best school for engineering this side of the Mississippi River?

Why ask why? Because if you don't, a life of ignorance is the only path available.

Why is it that when a young child demands "why" after every successive answer we grow impatient? When do we lose this innate sense of curiosity? Do we lose it or is it verbally flogged out of our systems?

It's time to wake up, Cal Poly. Time to rise out of that laconic stupor and start demanding answers. Ask why your inflated fees are getting you less bang for your buck. Ask why, in a city that can reach more than 100 degrees, there is no air-conditioning.

Ask why CAPTURE installed that stupid extra line simply to tell you that all the other lines are busy, but since you reached this one you can have the privilege of hearing it from a recorded operator rather than a convenient busy signal. Ask anything, just as long as you get used to using that interrogative phrase. Once you get the hang of it, just keep going, ask anything.

Is everybody with me on this?

Anyone? Anyone?

Poly looks to avenge last year's loss to Sonoma

By John Cristofano
Staff Writer

If revenge plays a factor in football games, then it will play a key role in Saturday night's football game between Sonoma State and Cal Poly.

Last year in Rhonert Park, the Cossacks defeated Cal Poly 27-7. That win by Sonoma avenged a 32-7 loss to Cal Poly in 1990.

Mustang head coach Lyle Setencich hopes his team can reverse last year's result tomorrow night at Mustang Stadium.

Kickoff is slated for 7 p.m.

"Anytime you lost to a team the last time you played, it serves as extra motivation," Setencich said. "We know we'd like to do a better job this time."

The Mustangs enter this weekend's contest on a two-game win streak (2-1 overall), including a 35-3 win over Cal State Hayward last week.

They will have to contend with a Sonoma State team that upset then sixth-ranked Portland State last week.

"They've been very good on defense," Setencich said. "They're a very physical team on that side."

The Mustangs will rely on an offense which averages 405.3

yards per game. Nearly half of that total, 180 yards, comes from a rushing attack led by Chris Smith, Brian Fitz and Cory Bowen.

Smith leads the Mustang rushers with an average of 6.7 yards per carry. He ranks second in the WFC in rushing yards per game (88 yards).

Sonoma State's rushing defense has allowed an average of 178 yards in its last three games, an increase from 63 yards a game last year.

Cal Poly's defense, which is giving up 278.3 yards per game, will face "a pretty balanced team on offense, with a lot of speed," Setencich said.

Sonoma State, led on offense by quarterback Daryl Fortenberry and wide receiver Charles Guy, is averaging 376 yards per game.

Fortenberry has completed 35 of 68 passes for 590 yards, six touchdowns and two interceptions. Guy ranks second in the NCAA Division II in receiving yards per game with an average of 122 yards per game.

Fortenberry, a first-year starter who redshirted last season, is protected by an offensive line that includes three players each weighing in at 310 pounds.

Poly soccer posts 2-1 overtime win at San Bernardino

By Kevin Comerford
Staff Writer

The Cal Poly men's soccer team had another thrilling come-from-behind victory Wednesday night, winning 2-1 in overtime over Cal State San Bernardino.

The victory was well earned for the Mustangs as it was their fourth road game in eight days and it came against last year's conference champion in scorching 110-degree temperatures.

The win improved Cal Poly's California Collegiate Athletic Association record to 4-1, which moves the Mustangs into first-place, ahead of Cal State Bakersfield (3-0-1).

The Mustangs fell behind 1-0 on a goal by San Bernardino forward Ted Chronopoulos at the 15 minute mark of the first half.

Cal Poly's Chris Fisher scored the tying goal on a shot from 15 feet out which ended up in the lower corner of the net. Mike Black assisted on Fisher's goal.

As the second half came to an end, the sun began to take its toll. Many of the Mustang players were exhausted and injuries forced them to be without any subs.

Ten minutes into the overtime period, midfielder Mike Nelson's shot from 35 feet out sailed into the upper corner of the net for the game-winner.

"This is a good win for the guys, and if we don't get anymore serious injuries we're looking pretty good," Cal Poly head coach Wolfgang Gartner said.

The Mustangs do look good and so does the rest of their schedule. Of their remaining 10 games this season, seven are at home and only three on the road.

Cal Poly's next game is scheduled for Wednesday at Cal State Dominguez Hills. The Mustangs return home Oct. 10 to play Cal State Bakersfield.

Loyola hands Poly netters fourth straight loss

By Brad Hamilton
Staff Writer

Cal Poly's Lael Perlstrom finished a few blocks shy of breaking her own school blocking record in a single match.

And Cal Poly ended a few points shy of beating Loyola Marymount in a women's volleyball match Saturday.

The Mustangs' senior middle blocker stopped 14 Loyola Marymount hits in vain, as Cal Poly fell in four games to the Lions.

Perlstrom set the single-match record of 17 blocks in five games against Fresno State last year.

Despite her blocking and the team-leading 16 digs from sophomore Eileen Bermundo, Loyola won 18-16, 15-13, 12-15 and 17-15.

It was Cal Poly's fourth consecutive loss after opening the season with 11 straight wins. Loyola Marymount's record improves to 7-6.

Mustang head coach Craig Cummings said he knows his team is good and is not worried about the losing skid.

"We're shaken (by the losses)," Cummings said. "It's a rude awakening, but we still can play the game."

The non-conference loss at Loyola was their first to the Lions. Cal Poly won all seven of the previous meetings.

The first game was up for grabs until Loyola finally walked away with an 18-16 win.

Game two had the Mustangs' name written all over it before the Lions stole the game.

The Mustangs were up 12-3 before giving up six straight points.

Cal Poly won the third game, posting a .206 kill percentage to the Lions' .163.

But the Mustangs' momentum slammed into the net in the fourth game with the Mustangs up 12-10. Cummings said the team lost composure when the Mustangs let a serve hit the floor.

"(The serve) was out but (the referees) called it in," Cummings said.

"It was a bunch of different things," said sophomore setter Carrie Bartkoski. "Everyone walked off the court wondering what we did wrong."

"To lose and know you did not play well makes it twice as bad," she added.

The Mustangs are looking to pull out of their skid tonight in the Wasatch Challenge against Utah, who have never beat the Mustangs. Saturday in Provo, Utah, the Mustangs will match up against Texas-Arlington and Brigham Young University.

Baseball season nears playoffs

American League

(AP) — George Brett made history, Frank Viola missed it by an inning, and the Milwaukee Brewers missed a chance to take advantage of Toronto's history of bad final weeks.

Brett, coming back from a two-day layoff caused by a sore left shoulder, became the 18th player to reach 3,000 hits, going 4 for 5 Wednesday night as the Kansas City Royals beat the California Angels 4-0.

Further up the coast, the Brewers lost to the Seattle Mariners 7-4, missing a chance to close within 1 1/2 games of the Blue Jays, who were no-hit by Viola for eight innings before losing 1-0 to the Boston Red Sox.

Milwaukee, which has one game left with the Mariners and three with the Oakland Athletics, still believes it can win the AL East in the final pennant race of the season.

National League

Jeff Brantley and Tom Glavine cleared some things up.

Brantley demonstrated his recent success as a starter wasn't a fluke and Glavine put concerns about his health entering the playoffs to rest in San Francisco's 1-0 victory over Atlanta on Wednesday night.

Brantley, making only his fourth start for the Giants after 52 relief appearances, pitched 5 1-3 innings to increase his scoreless streak to 20 1-3 innings.

Rod Beck pitched the final two innings for his 16th save as San Francisco snapped a two-game losing streak and ended Atlanta's three-game winning streak, one night after the Braves clinched the NL West title.

In Cincinnati, Tim Lincecum allowed five hits in seven innings as the Reds beat Los Angeles 3-1. Pedro Martinez (0-1), the younger brother of Dodgers starter Ramon Martinez, allowed four hits in six innings in his first start in the majors.

In other National League games Wednesday, Chicago shut out NL East champion Pittsburgh 6-0, New York beat Philadelphia 6-2, St. Louis defeated Montreal 3-2 in 11 innings, and Houston beat San Diego 5-4.

Magic to get $14.6 million

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Magic Johnson signed a $14.6 million one-year contract extension with the Los Angeles Lakers on Thursday, the largest single-season salary in team sports.

A source, speaking on the condition he not be identified, said the deal guaranteed Johnson $19.6 million through the end of the 1994-95 season. Johnson, who on Tuesday announced he was returning following a one-year layoff, already was under contract for this season and 1993-94 at $2.5 million per year.

Johnson, 33, retired on Nov. 7, 1991, after he was diagnosed as HIV positive, but came back to play for the gold medal-winning U.S. basketball team at the Barcelona Olympics.

Johnson expects to play 50-60 games this season, but his future beyond is uncertain. He announced his return to the Lakers nearly 11 months after abruptly retiring because he had contracted the virus that causes AIDS.

Johnson said he'll be examined often by doctors who admit they don't know just what the grind of professional basketball would do to a man with Johnson's medical condition.

"It's time to go back to work. It's time to have some fun," Johnson said when he announced his return. "I think the positives outweigh all the risks. That's not saying there are no risks, because life itself a risk."

Johnson stunned the nation and basketball fans worldwide when he revealed his illness, apparently ending a 12-year NBA career that included five championships with the Lakers.

Johnson is the NBA's career leader in assists with 9,921 and was the league's MVP in 1987, 1989 and 1990.

"I think it is important to register," Chasey said. "If you don't, you don't get to complain about (the results) afterward."

Chasey chose to "decline to state" a political party on his application.

"I don't want to be secluded with one party," he said.

This is the first presidential election in which Ben Smedley, a mechanical engineering junior, will be eligible to vote.

"I've been looking forward to it," Smedley said. "The last presidential election was frustrating because I couldn't vote."

PolySCOPE, the Young Democrats, and the College Republicans plan to continue voter registration at several locations on campus through Monday.

ASI President Kristin Burnett showed no affection for Perot.

"Perot is a weasel," she said. "He is not a good public administrator."

Margarite Gowgani, a local Republican party staffer said she wasn't worried about Perot. "Democrats have a lot more to worry about than us Republicans," she said. "We feel very confident."

Not surprisingly, local Democratic officials disagreed.

"We don't feel the announcement will take many votes away from us," said Democratic party official Patti Rede.

Marcia Bagnall, a graduate business student, thinks Perot's chances are slim.

"There is no way he will be elected because he breached his promise to all his supporters," she said.

One student, however, seemed partially impressed with Perot.

"He continues to keep suspicion or hope in people's minds," said food science senior Cammy Chabre. "By not playing by the rules, then maybe he can bring change. This upholds the statement that he wants change, because he isn't running in the usual way. I don't know if I will change my vote, but I will consider it."

Locally, Perot's supporters may again have a candidate — but won't have any furniture at their headquarters.

Democratic staffer Rede said that 11 weeks ago, when Perot unexpectedly ended his bid for candidacy, Perot supporters gave furniture from their headquarters to the Democrats.

But the Democrats aren't planning on returning it, Rede said.

Reported by Comerford on the Poly campus, Jones in downtown SLO, and written by Hubbell.

"I was a Perot supporter. Now I'm not going to vote for Perot. A president shouldn't be wishy-washy. They shouldn't play around with the public. He is too egotistical. We need leadership, not games."
